A Gracious Era

Original colonial detailing is the hallmark of this handsome eighteenth century home.

Built in Surry Virginia in 1770 by Quakers, Thomas and Mary Pretlow, this home exemplifies the timeless charm of colonial architecture. In 1947, one hundred and seventy-seven years after its original construction, it was taken apart brick by brick, board by board, and moved to its present location in Williamsburg. Two bricks marked with the initials of Thomas and Mary, TMP, and the year, 1770, have pride of place in the two brick sides of the home.

Graciously proportioned rooms offer a comfortable and inviting setting for entertaining and for everyday living.
Adjacent to the living room, the library boasts a painted panel above the fireplace depicting the home in its original Southampton County setting. The home's three additional fireplaces, framed in paneled surrounds, are handsome focal points of the living room, dining room and master bedroom.

A window-walled sunroom links the library to the kitchen and has doors leading to the terrace. Framed by boxwoods and in the shade of a 250 year old white oak tree, this charming outdoor living area offers a view to the side porch of the garage which imparts the quaint charm of a colonial outbuilding.
