Academic Policy

William and Mary Law School students who are approved to participate in an exchange program must be in good academic standing at William and Mary Law School. The student must meet the academic expectations of the exchange institution in order to receive credit for the classes taken at the exchange university. Credits from the host school will be accepted by William and Mary Law School for all passing grades. A passing grade is defined as “C” or higher. The credit transfers to William & Mary; the grades do not. Approval to register in all courses at the host institution must be received through the William & Mary Law School Associate Dean/Registrar.

Students attending William and Mary Law School from exchange schools should determine the correct number of credit hours to be taken with their home institution. Exchange students must take the minimum number of credit hours required (10) per semester at William and Mary Law School and will meet with a William and Mary Law School advisor for course registration approval. William and Mary’s course length is 15 weeks, and attendance is mandatory and tracked.

Program Cancellations and Travel Alerts

The exchange universities have three-year renewable agreements with William and Mary Law School. If for any reason exchange programs were to cancel, students would be notified in advance, and William and Mary Law School would attempt to locate another foreign study program for placement of William and Mary Law School students.
