

Introduction

Legislatures sometimes delegate responsibility for creating law to administrative agencies. With their subject-matter specialists on staff, agencies are sometimes better able to address topics that are complicated or unpredictable. Law created by agencies is known as administrative law, the most important part of which are regulations (sometimes called rules). This handout focuses on researching federal regulations, but the same principles apply to state regulations. Current federal regulations are organized by topic in the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR).

Enabling Legislation

An agency needs authorization from Congress before it can create any regulations. Congress grants this authority through a statute called enabling legislation. Enabling legislation designates what agency has the authority to create rules and sets the boundaries of that authority.

If you are reading a U.S. Code section, you have several tools you can use to find the regulations associated with that section. For example, 15 USC § 1453 sets out labeling requirements for consumer goods, but we want to find out if an agency has passed any regulations that specify what the requirements are for fruit juice, and where we can find those regulations in the CFR.

Finding a Regulation in the Code of Federal Regulations

A citation to the CFR looks similar to a citation to the U.S. Code. Here's a citation to the CFR section on fruit juice beverage labels:

21 CFR § 101.30 (2019)

- 21 is the Title – a subject division of the CFR.
- § 101.30 is the specific section – Section 30 of Part 101 (a “Part” is a subject subdivision of the CFR).

You can enter this citation in Lexis or Westlaw to get the text of the regulation.

Final Rules and Proposed Rules in the Federal Register

When an agency creates a new regulation, it must first publish it as a proposed rule in the Federal Register and allow the public to submit comments. After the comment period is over and the agency has made any changes to the regulation as a result of the comments, the agency publishes it in the Federal Register as a final rule, which is binding law. The final rule is then arranged by subject in the CFR. The process is similar to how a bill becomes a statute:

STAGE	HOW A FEDERAL REGULATION BECOMES LAW	HOW A FEDERAL STATUTE BECOMES LAW
Proposal	Proposed Rule	Bill
Discussion	Comment period	Floor debates, committees
Passed	Final Rule	Session Law
Codified	Code of Federal Regulations	United States Code

When the proposed rule and final rule appear in the Federal Register, they are published together with background information. Reading this background information can help you better understand the purpose and meaning of a regulation, just as legislative history can help you understand statutes.

To find a final rule in the Federal Register, go to the history line at the end of a CFR section. This line will identify the final rules that created the CFR section with citations to the Federal Register in chronological order. Here is the history line in the eCFR for 21 CFR § 101.30:

[58 FR 2925, Jan. 6, 1993, as amended at 58 FR 44063, Aug. 18, 1993; 58 FR 49192, Sept. 22, 1993; 81 FR 33994, May 27, 2016; 81 FR 59131, Aug. 29, 2016]

You can enter the Federal Register citation in Westlaw, Lexis, or the free government website federalregister.gov.

To find a proposed rule, look in the background information at the beginning of the final rule’s entry in the Federal Register. Usually, the entry begins with a summary of the rule, then may include a statement of costs and benefits, followed by a history of the rule. Somewhere near the beginning of this history, you will find a citation to the proposed rule. Look for mention of a proposed rule or a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM).

For example, to find the final rule that amended 21 CFR § 101.30 on May 27, 2016, look in that CFR section’s history line and find a citation to 81 FR 33994:

- 81 is the volume of the Federal Register.
- 33994 is the page number within volume 81.

Enter the citation 81 FR 33994 in the “Search Federal Register Documents” search form on federalregister.gov:

The screenshot shows the Federal Register website interface. At the top, it features the National Archives logo and the text "FEDERAL REGISTER The Daily Journal of the United States Government". The date "Thursday, March 26th" is displayed. Below this, there are three main sections: "Current Issue" (92 documents from 38 agencies, 286 Pages), "Public Inspection" (Special Filing: 12 documents from 10 agencies; Regular Filing: 86 documents from 42 agencies), and a search bar. The search bar contains the text "81 FR 33994" and shows "5 documents" found. Below the search bar are filters for "R", "PR", "N", and "PD".

You will get a result that looks like this:

The screenshot shows a search result for the citation "81 FR 33994". It indicates that the document was found on page 33741 of volume 81. The title of the document is "Food Labeling: Revision of the Nutrition and Supplement Facts Labels". The text describes the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) amending its labeling regulations for conventional foods and dietary supplements. The document is a rule by the FDA, dated 05/27/2016, and consists of 259 pages (pages 33741-33999).

Yet, as we considered the issues raised in the ANPRMs and the citizen petitions, the public health profile of the U.S. population changed, and new  information became available about nutrient definitions, reference intake values, and analytical methods. New dietary recommendations also were published. We reconsidered what nutrients we should require or permit to be listed on the Nutrition Facts label and what nutrient reference intake values we should use as a basis for calculating the percent DVs in food labeling. We also considered corresponding changes to the Supplement Facts labels. Consequently, in the Federal Register of March 3, 2014 (79 FR 11879), we issued a proposed rule to amend our labeling regulations for conventional foods and dietary supplements to provide updated nutrition information on the label and to help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices. The preamble to the proposed rule discussed,
